GGNRA CELEBRATES TENTH BIRTHDAY

The Golden Gate National Recreation Area—which grew in 10 years from a dream to the most popular unit of the National Park System—will celebrate its 10th birthday with a week long program of special activities, October 9th through October 17th.

The Western Regional Folklife Festival—formerly held at Fort Cronkhite in the Marin Headlands—will officially kick off the celebration the weekend of October 9th and 10th.

The eighth annual festival will feature traditional music, folk arts and folklife films representing the diverse ethnic constituency of the largest urban park in the world. Performers include Rose Maddox and Vern Williams, Queen Ida's Bon Temps Zydeco Band, Fiddler Jose Santana and Zazpiat Bat Basque Dancers.

In addition to the folklife festival, the park will sponsor a grand birthday celebration on Sunday October 17th, with music, entertainment, tributes to founders, exhibits and displays. Both events will be held on the Great Meadow of upper Fort Mason, Bay and Franklin Streets, San Francisco.

The celebration commemorates the momentous week, 10 years ago, when Congress ratified legislation by Representative Phillip Burton of San Francisco to create a park which now encompasses 68 square miles and attracts more than 22 million visitors a year from all over the world.

The first general superintendent of the recreation area, William J. Whalen, arrived in January of the following year clutching the Congressional legislation and nothing much else to guide him in his task.

Towards the end of the year Whalen invited seven civic leaders to lunch at the Presidio Officers Club to talk about proposals to set up a cultural foundation in the old Army Port of Embarcation.

"Help me!" the young superintendent said, and the group agreed to organize the Fort Mason Foundation. Ann Howell served ably as executive director during the formative years and was ultimately succeeded by Marc Kasky. The cultural center—like the recreation area which made it possible—became an acknowledged part of San Francisco life.

The recreation area grew in size and multitude of activities—Alcatraz opened, the National Maritime Museum was born, the Marin Headlands became the host for a multitude of organizations, hang gliders flew from Fort Funston and upper Fort Mason became a green meadow.

Congressman Phillip Burton, with the support of citizen groups and the Park Service expanded the size of the recreation area. Among the Burton amendments was a provision assigning a portion of the profits from the Cliff House and from the Haslett Warehouse office building to remodel buildings for the Fort Mason Center.

Superintendent Whalen was rewarded for his success with promotion to Director of the National Park Service, a position he held for more than three years. The present superintendent, John H. Davis, commented recently that "The GGNRA is a spectacular achievement of the National Park Service made possible by the enthusiasm and dedicated efforts of private citizens."

Commented Whalen, who is now executive director of the San Francisco Planning and Urban Research Association, "The Fort Mason Center is one of the nicer things that has happened at GGNRA—you see people enjoying it both day and night."

Among those celebrating the anniversary will be the members of the People for a Golden Gate National Recreation Area formed in 1970 to support the enactment of the legislation creating the park.

Speaking to the U.S. Senate on October 12, 1972, Senator Alan Cranston commented, "It is a tremendous thing that has happened, to preserve so much land for people in the metropolitan area."

The day before, in the House of Representatives, Congressman Phillip Burton had remarked, "Not only the five million people in the Bay Area, but generations to come, will always be grateful. . ."

In addition to the Sunday birthday party, four evening programs will be presented from 8-10 p.m., Tuesday-Friday, October 13-16, at the GGNRA Headquarters, Fort Mason, Bay and Franklin Streets. Each program will be about an activity of the recreation area. For further information, call (415) 556-0560.

INDEPENDENT PUBLISHERS CONFERENCE

Authors and publishers interested in the growing phenomenon of independent publishing will have an opportunity to meet, formally and informally, with the people who know its workings, on Saturday, October 23, when Media Alliance offers its second annual book publishing conference, "The Publishing Edge: the Independent Press in the 80s."

The intensive one-day program is designed to help participants make informed decisions on marketing and distribution, promotion and publicity, capitalizing on the independent press, author/publisher relations, and technology.

Pat Holt, book editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, and publisher William Kaufmann will open the morning and afternoon sessions, respectively. Two panels, "Survival Strategies in the 80s" and "Moving Books," will be followed by a choice of workshops on budget and cash flow, the media interview, using computers, foreign markets, grant writing, contracts, marketing and distribution, editor/author relations, and the independent press network.

Among the speakers are Valerie Miner, author and founder of the Feminist Writers Guild; Nolo Press publisher Jake Warner; Andy Ross, owner of Cody's Books; Adele Horowitz, Presidio Press editor; and Dan Poynter of Para Press.

Registration is $45. before October 15; $50. after, and includes coffee, lunch, and a reception. Inquiries and checks (payable to Media Alliance) should be directed to Annette Doornbos, Media Alliance, Fort Mason Center, San Francisco, CA 94123 (415) 441-2557.
